Econ 172A, Final Information

1. Your Grade
   The course outline provides the formula I will use for assigning grades. I will tabulate a total point score based on the sum of your six best quizzes, the sum of the homework scores, and the final. I will post information about your cumulative point total on quizzes and homework when the information is available (that is, after Homework 3 and Quiz 8 have been graded).

2. Technical Matters
   The examination is on Thursday, March 22, 8-11, 109 Center Hall. You cannot use any notes, books, or computers. You will need paper and something to write with. You may use a calculator, but calculators are not needed.
   You will have an assigned seat for the final. See the next page.
   Your seat assignment is of the form XnY, where X is the Row, n is the seat, and Y is either L, M, or R (for Left, Middle, and Right).
   Rows are in alphabetical order from the back of the room. Row A is the one closest to the rear door. Row I is the front row.
   Left, Center, and Right are determined from the perspective of a student (or someone entering the room from the rear).
   Seats are numbered from left to right within each section. Hence Seat B2M is in the second row from the back, one seat from the left-hand aisle, in the middle of the classroom.

3. Office Hours
   Luis: Wednesday March 21, 10-12 in Sequoia 248
   Joel: Monday March 19, 3:30-5 and Wednesday March 21, 1-3 in Economics 311.

4. What to Study
   Expect examination questions to be similar to questions that you have seen. I will not ask you to reproduce theoretical arguments, but may ask short answer or guess questions (true-false or multiple choice) aimed at testing your understanding of theory. The exam will cover material with (approximately) the same weight that the material was covered in class. If I talked about it, have assigned problems about it, or it is in the notes, then it is fair game. Otherwise, it is not.

5. Aftermath
   I will post final grades, answers, and a note about how I came up with final grades when I have the information (probably Monday, March 26). Graded exams (and other uncollected papers) will be available in the Econ undergraduate office, 245 Sequoia.
